Dear [Recipient's Name],

I hope this letter finds you in good spirits as we approach the fall weather! Our campus is alive with new students and fresh energy as this Fall Semester starts..

I am writing to you with deep respect and an earnest heart, seeking your support. As I reflect on the biblical account of Aaron and Hur, who held up the arms of Moses during the battle against Amalek (Exodus 17:8-13), I am reminded of the power of unity, support, and the strength that comes from working together.

In this story, the Israelites faced a formidable challenge, and the outcome of the battle depended on Moses' strength—both physical and spiritual. When his arms became weary, Aaron and Hur stood by him, holding his arms aloft until victory was secured. This profound act of solidarity not only highlighted the importance of community support but also illustrated how collective effort can lead to triumph over adversity.

I find myself in a situation that echoes this ancient story. We are in the middle of a battle for the hearts and minds of young people. Our world is dark and getting worse. People with a biblical worldview, personal integrity, and godly morals are few and far between. We are on the front lines fighting to make a difference in this generation.

When I look at our recent graduates, I realize both the importance and the impact we are making for the cause of Christ. All around the world, our recent graduates are joining in the battle for souls. While we may not be deploying jeeps, tents, and GI's of the cross like we did a generation ago, men and women are still spilling off this campus to fight for the cause of Christ.

To be honest, like Moses, I sometimes feel weary and overwhelmed. However, I firmly believe that, with the support and collaboration of compassionate individuals like you, we can achieve our goals and overcome the obstacles before us.

I am reaching out to you to request your financial support. Please don't just toss this letter aside. Prayerfully consider helping us in this very real battle. Just as Aaron and Hur played a vital role in Moses' victory, your involvement can make a profound difference in this endeavor. Together, we can uplift one another and work together to make a difference.
